Anna Maria Maiolino:

Making Love Revolutionary

With simple materials like clay, paper and ink

Anna Maria Maiolino (b. 1942, Italy) constructs a fascinating world rooted in human conditions such as longing, fragility and resistance. This is the artist's first retrospective in the UK, spanning six decades of work. Born in Italy during World War II, Maiolino has lived in Brazil since 1960.

Her oeuvre gives form to her experience of exile, deprivation and survival under authoritarian and patriarchal regimes. Opening the exhibition are hundreds of simple shapes made of clay such as balls, rolls and snakes. Slight variations evidence the work of the hand, kneading and shaping the primal material of art – mud...

Continues on next page.

...Maiolino's gestural forms evoke baking, housework and objects of ritual. A sense of fragility permeates the raw clay, as it dehydrates and changes colour. Her drawings and sculptures constitute a lyrical geometry with marks and voids suggesting an alphabet, maps and topographies; meticulously sewn threads outline a journey of possible spatial configurations. The upper galleries feature prints of the 1960s, and the radical shifts in the use of paper during the 1970s, moving from figuration to a dynamic abstraction inspired by Neo-Concretism. Created under the radar of Brazil's military regime, Maiolino's politically-charged films and photographs explore repression and hunger. Scarcity of food in her childhood and the social and cultural deficiencies of daily life shape the series Photopoemaction (1976–2000)...

...A mouth opens and closes, swallows an egg and expels threads; bare feet tread carefully among scattered eggs. Black stains and flowing lines may represent alienation; or mutate to become symbols of love and regeneration.

"la Caixa" Collection of Contemporary Art
Selected by Tom McCarthy

A strange metal object lies shattered in the desert sands. Is it from outer space? Or is it a fragment of our military disasters? This image by Sophie Ristelhueber (b. 1949, France), taken in Kuwait after the Gulf War, is likened by novelist Tom McCarthy (b. 1969, UK) to the starling's nest colonised by honey bees in W.B. Yeats's Meditations in Time of Civil War (1922). The photograph and poem are the starting point for Empty House of the Stare, McCarthy's meditation on surveillance and control, and their malfunction and breakdown...

Continues on next page.

...Guest curator McCarthy builds his narrative around the work of seven artists in "la Caixa" Collection of Contemporary Art. In Illuminer (2001) by Steve McQueen (b. 1969, UK), a man watches a report about troops training for possible military operations in Afghanistan on TV in a dark hotel room. A sculpture by Isa Genzken (b. 1948, Germany) – crumpled bookshelves found on a lower Manhattan street after September 11, 2001 – bears an uncanny resemblance to the remains of the twin towers. From his series Destructuras, Aitor Ortiz (b. 1971, Spain) photographs a modernist building as a haunting concrete shell. If the reels of tape in the archive by Pedro Mora (b. 1961, Spain) contain any recordings, they are irretrievable. We enter the ground floor gallery towards a radiant portal by Eugenio Ampudia (b. 1985, Spain) that might offer illumination and clarity but could be a trick of the light, an illusion...

Continues on next page.

...Eve Sussman's (b. 1961, UK) film about a worker in City-A, a Central Asia oil town, uses an algorithm to determine the sequence of scenes so that, like real life, the story is never the same twice.

Sense Sound/Sound Sense: Fluxus Music,
Scores & Records in the Luigi Bonotto Collection

How should we use a grand piano in order to produce sound? By opening the piano and stacking wooden blocks inside the instrument until one falls and creates a noise, or by dropping dried beans onto the keys? Conceptual fluxus artist George Brecht (1926–2008), in one of his iconic works Incidental Music, instructed fellow artists to demonstrate how several people at once could interact with the piano...

Continues on next page.

The Fluxus movement emerged in the 1960s as an international network of artists, musicians and performers who staged experimental happenings using everyday materials. They shared an attitude to creativity that was anti-academic, quotidian and open to all. Including works by John Cage, Dick Higgins, Alison Knowles, George Maciunas, Charlotte Moorman, Claes Oldenburg, Yoko Ono and Nam June Paik Sense Sound/Sound Sense investigates Fluxus artists' interest in music and sound through performance, scores, records and objects from the Luigi Bonotto Collection. Fluxus artists assigned importance to musical production, presenting public events as concerts that challenged conventional form and content in music and introduced the element of chance. Their approach to music scores was equally radical. Breaking free from traditional sheet music...

Commission

Eileen Simpson and Ben White (Open Music Archive): Once Heard Before

From the dance floor anthem to scratchy recordings of the blues, the history of popular music is a source of rich inspiration for successive generations. For this commission, artists Eileen Simpson and Ben White (both b. 1977, UK) collaborated with a group of young musicians and Spotlight Youth Centre in East London to produce a call and response that activates past, present and future sounds. Also showing is their film Everything I Have Is Yours (2019), featuring musicians from Manchester, now in their 70s and 80s...

Continues on next page.

...Shot in a space between a recording studio and live venue, the camera tracks the assembled musicians as they interact with samples that have been extracted from 1950s and 1960s UK chart hits. The copyright-expired elements of the original records are separated out through an algorithmic process, to enable collective use and sharing. Working at the intersection of art, music and digital technologies, Eileen Simpson and Ben White explore authorship, ownership and distribution in art. Founders of the Open Music Archive, they source, digitise and distribute out-of-copyright sound recordings to spark collaborative projects and free exchanges.

Film Programme

V–A–C LIVE: This is not (a) cinema

This Is Not (a) Cinema premieres two radically inventive late-Soviet artistic experiments:

SovPoliKadr studio (SovPolyFrame) by Alexander Shein (1933–2015, Moscow) and the CentrNauchFilm (Centre of Scientific and

Educational Film) by Vladimir Kobrin (1942–

1999, Moscow). It was at MosFilm, founded in 1924 and still Russia's most important film studio, that director Alexander Shein formed an innovative research lab. Established in the late 1960s, SovPoliKadr was dedicated to experimenting with visual narrative and multiple screen techniques. ..

Continues on next page.

...Short films were produced for official celebrations such as the Vladimir Lenin (1970) and Paris Commune (1971) centenaries, or international events such as Expo '75. Seen outside their propagandistic role, they stand as exemplary works of highly innovative and politically engaged art. A. Khanzhonkov & Co. Scientific Department was established in the early 1900's to produce educational and documentary films. Renamed CentrNauchFilm in 1967, the studio pioneered widescreen, stereophonic films and new cinematic technologies. Working within the studio, visionary film-maker Vladimir Kobrin produced educational films that comment on history, science and Russian society in the 1980s and 90s...

...Despite being commissioned by scientific societies his films transcend the documentary, offering seamlessly crafted essays that testify to Kobrin's science-infused macabre. This Is Not (a) Cinema also includes screenings and a live intervention by London based artists Broomberg & Chanarin. Adam Broomberg (b. 1970, South Africa) and Oliver Chanarin (b. 1971, UK) are renowned for photographs which use imaging technologies and found photographs to reflect on conflict, trauma and the politics of surveillance.

Radical Figures: Painting in the New Millennium

Hybrid figures, dysmorphic bodies, corporeal composites and ambiguous polymorphous forms are making their mark after several decades marked by the dominance of abstraction and conceptual approaches to painting. This group exhibition highlights the renewed interest in radical modes of figuration in the past two decades...

...highlighting the range of painterly techniques used to render bodies, from fluid gestural brushwork to thick impasto. How are artists painting the figure to reflect the possibilities and limits of the body in the age of the internet, to expand and destabilise fixed notions of identity and to reflect social uncertainty and personal anxieties?
